

Modern Scientific Views and Christian Doctrines Compared (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Modern Scientific Views and Christian Doctrines Compared A Prominent American unbeliever observed, not long ago, in a leading periodical: A profound change has taken place in the world of thought... Christians excuse themselves for belonging to the Church, by denying a part of the creed. The idea is abroad that they who know the most of Nature believe the least about Theology. The sciences are regarded as infidels, and facts as scoffers. It is, alas! but too true that many intelligent people of our country have become either open opponents or indifferent to the truths of Christianity, because they labor under the false impression, that Modern Science has brought facts to light which demolish the very foundation of Christian belief. It is taken for granted by many so-called advanced thinkers, that the Mosaic Account of the Creation and primeval history of mankind has been completely refuted by the results of modern scientific research, that no vestige of a Creator or Supreme Ruler of the Universe is to be found in visible Nature, that the soul of man is essentially alike to the life-giving principle of brutes, and its immortality, at least, doubtful, etc. Such and similar infidel views, which are destructive of the very fundamental doctrines of Christianity, are more or less openly taught in many schools, colleges, and universities, and published in books, pamphlets, and papers, which are circulated throughout the country.
